Adler School of Professional Psychology

Founded in 1952, Adler School of Professional Psychology is the oldest independent school of Psychology in the North America. The School is named after Alfred Adler (1870-1937), the first community psychologist, whose theories and teachings of psychology emphasize the uniqueness of every individual’s relationship and connection with society. Adler School is committed to continuing the work of Alfred Adler by producing socially responsible graduates, by providing holistic services to individuals and communities, and by promoting social justice.

The University of Alabama
Graduate School

The University of Alabama Graduate School, through graduate offerings of the various colleges and schools, prepares students for careers in a wide range of teaching, research, creative, and service activities. The Graduate School assists the graduate faculty in offering programs of study leading to more than 120 master’s, educational specialist, and doctoral degrees. It works with the office of the Executive Vice President and Provost to coordinate the ongoing program review of all academic departments and programs of the University.

Argosy University, Atlanta
College of Psychology and Behavioral Sciences

Argosy University’s College of Psychology and Behavioral Sciences offers programs designed for those interested in various mental health professions. Some programs can prepare graduates for licensure as psychologists, counselors or therapists. Other programs can prepare individuals to work in fields that apply psychology, like corrections, addictions, sports/exercise, or religious institutions, hospitals, and clinics. Argosy offers programs in Clinical Psychology, Counseling Psychology, and various fields of applied psychology, including Forensic Psychology, Sport-Exercise Psychology, Pastoral Community Counseling, and Industrial Organizational Psychology. These programs were formerly known collectively as the American School of Professional Psychology.

Boston University
Mental Health Counseling and Behavioral Medicine Program

The Master of Arts (M.A.) in Mental Health Counseling and Behavioral Medicine (MHCBM) is an intensive 60-credit degree program designed to meet the requirements for an independent mental health-care license in Massachusetts and other states. The primary objective is to prepare individuals in mental health counseling interventions with a complementary background in behavioral medicine and neuroscience. Graduates of the (MHCBM) program provide a range of assessment, diagnostic, and treatment-focused counseling services to clients in mental health, medical research and independent practice settings. The program can be completed in two years of full-time study. Our curriculum consists of a combination of academic course work and substantial clinical experiences in a diverse medical school/hospital environment. The M.A. program in (MHCBM) is the first of its kind in the United States, making Boston University a leader in preparing master’s-level mental health clinicians.

Georgia Institute of Technology
Public Policy

We house one of the world's top programs in the field of science and technology (S&T) policy. We are a university partner in the European Union's network of excellence in technology and innovation policy ("PRIME"), and we host a major international conference on S&T policy that brings participants from every continent. Because nearly every policy area is intertwined with S&T issues -- the environment, communications, transportation, biotechnology and health, urban development, workforce and education, -- the School is at the center of a wide range of important international, national, and state policy questions. Our faculty members are research oriented, with over $10 million in research underway. Our degrees are analytically oriented, developing skills increasingly in demand in the policy world as data and powerful software becomes more readily available and policy challenges grow more complex. Because our degree programs are smaller than most, there are opportunities at all levels for students to become involved in research, from the fast growing numbers of undergraduate students helping on faculty research projects to the opportunities many of our PhD students have to publish scholarly papers.

Wake Forest University
School of Law

At Wake Forest Law School, our small, family-like atmosphere assures that you will never be lost in the crowd. As a strong academic community, committed to our students, we have designed curricula that produce broadly educated lawyers—and we have developed an approach to teaching the law that is both challenging and supportive. Current students represent 32 states and 7 countries, and we have alumni in 45 states and 31 countries. There are 6 clinics which offer field work in the legal profession and help you practice what you learn. Students work, argue, research, write and practice, often while helping citizens in need. There is also a Washington, DC experience available for selected students during the second semester of your 3L year.

Washington and Lee University
School of Law

Washington and Lee University School of Law, founded in 1849, is located in Lexington, Virginia, three hours from Washington, DC. Washington and Lee is known for providing its students with an academically rigorous and professionally challenging legal education in an environment characterized by a commitment to students, small classes, a very low student-to-faculty ratio, and a collegial community. The law school is among the nation’s smallest law schools with approximately 400 total students. W&L Law offers an innovative curriculum in which students are engaged in distinct yet complimentary ways over the course of their three years in law school. Students encounter a linear sequence of learning experiences rooted in the basic assumption that each year of law school should build upon the lessons of its predecessor but also present new and different challenges. The third year is entirely experiential with students learning the law through a considered blend of real and simulated client-based practice experiences.
